NEWS BY THE ENGLISH MAIL, VIA SUFZ.

The mail per Orient steamer Potos was delivered in Sydney at 6 o'clock yesterday morning. Our London and foreign correspondence and papers are to the 11th April.

OUR LONDON LETTER.

LONDON, APRIL 11.
The chief political event of the week has been the passing of the second reading of the Franchise Bill. This took place on Monday night, and was signalled by the delivery of a remarkable speech from Mr. Gladstone. The latter gentleman and Mr. Goschen delivered the evening between them, and the right hon. member for Ripon was the only person who delivered a really effective speech against the bill. The legitimate Conservatives either tacitly admitted that they were in favour of the measure, or else their arguments against it were of a kind which applied with equal force to Mr. Disraeli's bill of 1867. After a wearisome debate the division was taken, and amidst ringing cheers, it was announced that the Government had secured a majority of 130. This immense majority far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the Liberals. It was thought that if the Franchise bill voted with the Government, 110 would be the very outside that the latter could secure. As it was 135 Franchise votes with the Government, but the latter would have been able to have secured a commanding majority without this aid. It is true that on other occasions the Government have secured larger majorities. For instance, on the second reading of the Irish Land Bill they secured a majority of 178, and on other occasions their majority has exceeded one hundred and thirty. Nevertheless the fact remains that last Monday night's vote was the most solid that has been seen for some time, and it affords very satisfactory evidence that, in spite of the struggling of the Liberal party of which we have heard so much of late, they all ran very well together when they get upon a good point. Though there were two or three exceptions there were, with the exception of Mr. Goschen, no "verts" on the latter side, and it is safe to say that it was always expected that he would vote against the measure.

The effects of such a decided victory will be twofold. Firstly, it will have an immense moral influence upon the House of Lords. Instead of knocking humbly at the door of the Upper Chamber, the Government will be able to enter with a strong kick at the door of that august assembly, and now everybody is asking with reference to Lord Salisbury in the language of one of Bulwer Lytton's novels, "What will he do with it?" The general impression is that the noble lord will not advise his followers to attempt to wreck the bill, but that he will endeavour to mutilate it, and in particular their attention will be specially directed to excluding Ireland from the sphere of its operation. In opposition to this view, however, it should be stated that some few Conservatives in the House of Commons are in favour of the bill, and in the House of Lords the particular point on which Lord Salisbury is so much opposed to the bill is the clause which would give the franchise to the Duke of Richmond. It is more likely therefore that the House of Lords will assent to the bill on more specific protection being afforded to minorities. In connection with this last expression of opinion, it is worth mentioning that the Government have obtained the written assent of some 300 members, both Liberals and half Tories. A very interesting experiment has just been tried by the committee of gentlemen associated with Sir John Lubbock for securing the votes of persons for the purpose of affording a practical illustration of the working of this project, and the experiment in every sense has been most satisfactory.

For some time past it has been rumoured that the Speaker was preparing for a marked display of his powers at the expense of his Irish friends, and on the 11th night of the particular point on which Lord Salisbury is so much opposed to the bill is the clause which would give the franchise to the Duke of Richmond. It is more likely therefore that the House of Lords will assent to the bill on more specific protection being afforded to minorities. In connection with this last expression of opinion, it is worth mentioning that the Government have obtained the written assent of some 300 members, both Liberals and half Tories. A very interesting experiment has just been tried by the committee of gentlemen associated with Sir John Lubbock for securing the votes of persons for the purpose of affording a practical illustration of the working of this project, and the experiment in every sense has been most satisfactory.

As is at present living in daily expectation of an Egyptian crisis, in consequence of the threatened resignation of Nubar Pasha, who cannot get along with Mr. Clifford Lloyd, Minister of the Interior. The latter gentleman, it may be remembered, was formerly an Irish magistrate during the reign of the late Queen, and he is generally distinguished himself by his indomitable energy and pluck. Ever since Nubar's accession to power the relationship between himself and Mr. Clifford Lloyd have been very strained, and the difficulties of the situation have been accentuated by the fact that Mr. Clifford Lloyd does not manage to get along with Sir Benson Maxwell, another of the English officials. The latter gentleman seems to be a somewhat meddlesome disposition, for a short time ago Sir Evelyn Wood, who is a very cautious moderate man, appears to have found it necessary to request him to confine his attention to that branch of Egyptian affairs with which he was most intimately connected. Nubar Pasha, in his attempt to keep them from interfering, appears to have fallen foul of Mr. Clifford Lloyd. By his threat of resigning he appears to have hoped to induce the British Government to withdraw the latter gentleman; but now he finds that he has made a mistake in his calculations. It is highly probable that he will continue to stay in Egypt, but he is no doubt indignant in this decision by the fact that the events of the past week have tended to bring still nearer into view the prospect of an English protectorate. The French Government are known to be propounding a scheme for guaranteeing the Egyptian debt, and unless Mr. Gladstone is prepared to adopt this scheme, he will be forced to make an administration of Egypt, the raison d'être of our presence in the country will speedily cease. Herein lies the chief difficulty with his colleagues. The majority of them are not only ready to assume a protectorate, but several of the more prominent are willing to guarantee the debt. It is doubtful whether the British taxpayer will be willing to assume this additional responsibility, but, having once placed himself on the inclined, or rather declined, plane, every step from the bombardment of Alexandria onwards has become less and nearer to the inevitable consequence; and it is difficult to imagine that, having advanced thus far, the British public will allow themselves to be allowed out of Egypt by this latest French manoeuvre. The view which Mr. Mackenzie Wallace takes in his "Egypt and the Egyptian Question" is gaining ground every day, the more we know of the resources of the country. It only requires good management to secure the result which Dr. Mackenzie Wallace confidently anticipates; but that result will never be achieved by the rough, hectoring modes of Mr. Clifford Lloyd and many other English officials. They are able men, and they are zealous to abolish abuses, but, like their great chief, the "grand old man," they are a deal too much in earnest. Had the English Government employed more tact and more discretion, the Egyptian people would have been more than ready to accept of an Oriental mission which such officials possess would have saved us many troubles.

Our dual houses are showing up rather badly just now. The case of the Duke of Marlborough needs no mention. Within the last day or two Lady Campbell has obtained a divorce from her husband, and the proceedings have been heard in camera—the most unusual occurrence at the request, it is said, of the "highest authority" in the land. Lord Cairns Campbell is the youngest son of the Duke of Argyll, whose prudent, trifling father put into the hands of the Duke of Marlborough the management of the estate. But the interest in these matters has been thrown into the shade by the sensational proceedings in the case of Water v. Smith.

Last Saturday, being the funeral of Prince Leopold, was generally observed as a day of mourning throughout the country. The ceremony at the Chapel Royal, Windsor, was of a most impressive nature, and was attended by an immense number of persons of rank and position. The Duke of Albany had an opportunity of viewing the coffin and seeing her late husband's face before the ceremonial took place; but her Royal Highness was so much affected by the sight as to be unable to attend the funeral. The coffin was borne to its last resting-place on the shoulders of a picked body of men, and the Duke of Albany, who was accompanied by Lord Cairns Campbell, the Hon. Mr. St. John, and other gentlemen, was seen to weep bitterly as he viewed the coffin. The Duke of Albany, who was accompanied by Lord Cairns Campbell, the Hon. Mr. St. John, and other gentlemen, was seen to weep bitterly as he viewed the coffin.

The order to wear mourning for the late Duke has been most loyally responded to. One may walk through the principal parks at the most fashionable hour of the day without seeing a single lady in other than a black dress, or a black and white costume. Of course the male sex have not responded to the invitation so generally as the ladies; but, despite the general change in the weather, black coats and hats are decidedly the order of the day. The "mashers" are wearing a very narrow black band, and the "mashers" are wearing a very narrow black band, and the "mashers" are wearing a very narrow black band.

The hard fate of poor Mr. Yates, of the World, is still a theme of constant discussion. The point of view which is taken by his friends is that he is a victim of a cruel and unjust fate, and that he is a victim of a cruel and unjust fate, and that he is a victim of a cruel and unjust fate. The remarks which the Lord Chief Justice made concerning society journalism generally have been very severely criticised, and, as in his famous judgment on the Helt case, Lord Coleridge seems to have gone to the length of saying that he himself is open to the same condemnation. The defence of himself which Mr. Yates makes in this week's World is very generally admired, and it is considered that, as between himself and the Lord Chief Justice, he undoubtedly has the better of it. Of course, one can say that the Lord Chief Justice is a victim of a cruel and unjust fate, and that he is a victim of a cruel and unjust fate, and that he is a victim of a cruel and unjust fate.

The late sitting of the House before the Rafter bill was also marked by the introduction of the long-promised London Municipality Bill. This is a subject which will not have much interest to your readers, but it is one which has attracted the attention of the House of Commons, and it is one which has attracted the attention of the House of Commons, and it is one which has attracted the attention of the House of Commons.

From our files to the 11th April we extract the following items:—
THE REFORM BILL.
The bill has been read a second time by the House of Commons, and it is now in the hands of the Committee. The bill is a very important one, and it is one which has attracted the attention of the House of Commons, and it is one which has attracted the attention of the House of Commons.

will be hailed by the country with great satisfaction. Mr. Gladstone's speech at a meeting at which he was present, was a very able one, and it was one which has attracted the attention of the House of Commons, and it is one which has attracted the attention of the House of Commons.

FRENCH COUNTESS TO THE PRINCE OF WALES.
The Havas Agency states that at Windsor on Friday, the Prince of Wales, addressing the Military and Naval Attachés to the French Embassy, said: "I am extremely touched by your kind interest in sending you here. I am sure that you will find it very interesting to see the country, and I am sure that you will find it very interesting to see the country."

ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION.

By the incoming half the thirty-third annual report of the Oriental Bank Corporation dated 4th April has been received. It is as follows:—
The directors present their thirty-third annual report, and balance sheet for the year 1883, and also a statement of the results of the year 1884, and also a statement of the results of the year 1884, and also a statement of the results of the year 1884.

The journal Comptance, published at Tiflis contains an article warning Russia against following an sanguine a policy in Central Asia, notwithstanding the alluring prospect held out to her by the newly opened route to the tropical seas. Before taking any further steps, the Russian Government should define and strengthen its position from Bactria to Herat and Baluch, a work still requiring much labor, and that the Russian Government should give the Balkan limitator Russian Asia. We consider whether she is sufficiently strong to maintain herself in the new territories which she may be called upon to acquire.
